Part B. CV SUMMARY (max. 3500 characters, including spaces)

Eduardo Rico Boquete (1962) became a doctor of History from the Universidade de Santiago de Compostela (1995) with the thesis A riqueza forestal de Galicia no século XX: produción e explotación ('Galicia's forest wealth in the 20th century: Production and exploitation'), directed by professor Ramón Villares Paz.

His lines of research are agrarian history, the timber industry, forest policy, Francoism and autarky. The selected contributions are intended to be a sample of a consolidated line of research in relation to contemporary agrarian history and, more specifically, with forestry and related industries. Originally, the main objective was focused on trying to understand and explain the changes that occurred in the use and exploitation of forest lands in the long term and in the Spanish context. Thus, in my first research works the Galician framework was the one that predominated, as can be seen in the complete curriculum, in the following years I have tried to advance in the knowledge of what happened in the whole of Spain in the 20th century, and a good example of this is the contributions chosen to illustrate this abbreviated cv. In addition, and this also constitutes another novelty, in recent works I have included the analysis of other variables related to economic and industrial factors, without forgetting social aspects, and I have paid greater attention to environmental issues, especially in relation to the processes of substitution and introduction of new species. On the other hand, this field of research has a strong interdisciplinary character, which can be seen, for example, in the fact that a good part of the references cited below come from historians, geographers, forestry engineers, historians of economics and professors of applied economics. In fact, the results obtained in the research works whose main objective has been to analyze the history of forest policy in Spain during the 20th century, paying special attention to social and environmental factors, have been positively valued by well-known specialists

Part C. RELEVANT MERITS (sorted by typology)

Several of the referred articles have been published in the journal Historia Agraria, which is indexed in the Arts & Humanities Citation Index (A & HCI) and in the Social Science Citation Index (SSCI) of the Institute of Scientific Information (ISI). In the 2014 JCR it presented the following parameters: Impact factor: 0.300. Immediacy index: 0.118. Q2 History. On the other hand, the European Reference Index for the Humanities classifies Agrarian History at the highest level as it is considered an ERIH-INT1 publication, that is, an international publication with high visibility and influence and cited among researchers from various areas in different countries. In 2014, the SCJ was 0.122 and the PPI was 0.2. I have also had the opportunity to participate with various chapters in works of a collective nature that have been published in other countries by prestigious publishers such as L'Harmattan, Cab Internacional and Presses Universitaires du Mirail
